Despite their challenges, both families find hope and strength in their faith. The Jacksons believe that God will help them through their difficult time. The Millers believe that their faith will give them the strength to persevere.

As the families' stories unfold, they learn that the greatest of all virtues is charity. Charity is the love of God and neighbor. It is the desire to help others, even when it is difficult.

Through their acts of charity, the families find healing and redemption. They also find a renewed sense of purpose and hope.
