The story follows Moose, a lovable but mischievous creature who loves to be massaged. However, his friends quickly learn that massaging Moose is not always a good idea.

When Moose's friends massage his antlers, he starts to get a little too excited. He kicks his legs and throws his head back, sending his friends flying through the air.

When they massage his belly, he starts to giggle uncontrollably. He rolls around on the ground, laughing so hard that he can't breathe.

And when they massage his tail, he starts to dance around like a crazy moose. He shakes his tail feathers and makes funny faces, making his friends laugh until their sides hurt.

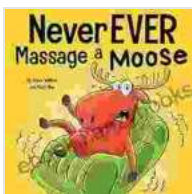

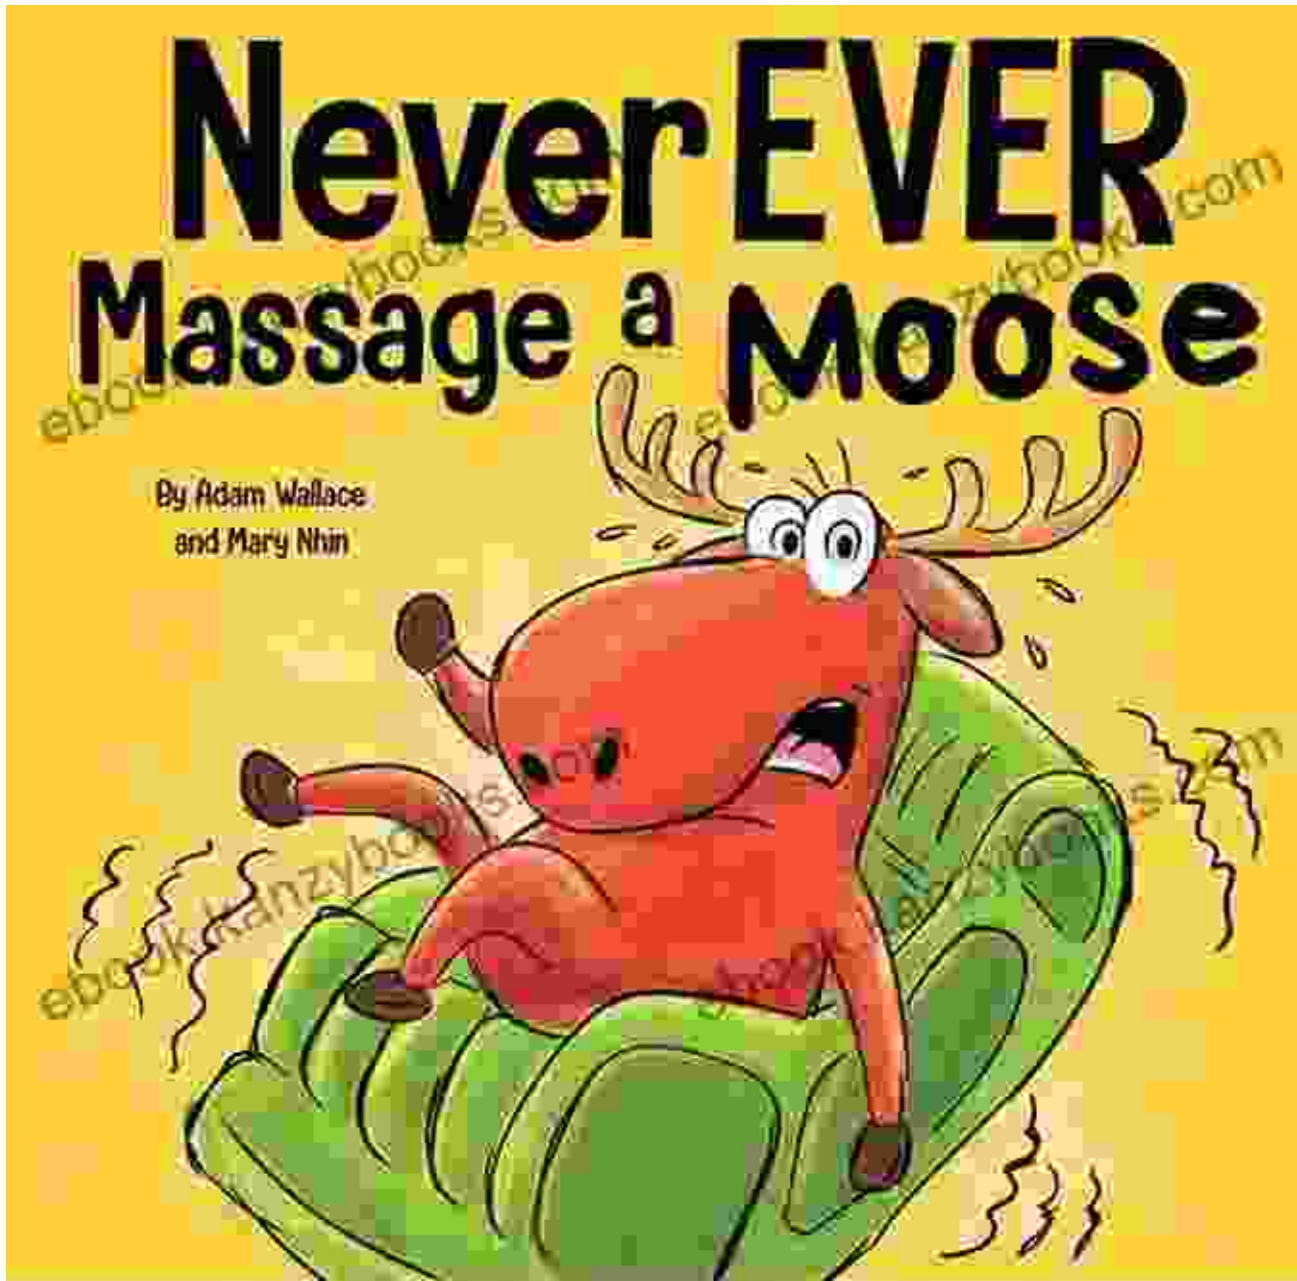

But one day, Moose's friends finally learn their lesson. They realize that massaging Moose is not always a good idea, and that it's important to respect his boundaries.

They also learn that it's important to follow instructions. When Moose tells them to stop massaging him, they stop. And when he tells them to leave him alone, they leave him alone.

Most importantly, they learn that it's important to be kind to others. Even though Moose can be a little annoying at times, his friends still love him and care about him. They know that he's a good moose, and they want to be good friends to him.
