Sam and Charlie meet in college in the 1980s, and their love is as passionate and all-consuming as it is unexpected. But as they graduate and start to build their lives together, they are faced with challenges that threaten to tear them apart.

Charlie is diagnosed with HIV, and as the disease progresses, Sam must watch the love of his life slowly slip away. In the midst of their heartbreak, they make a pact to stay together, no matter what. But as Charlie's health declines, Sam begins to question the nature of their relationship and the choices they have made.

In the years that follow, Sam struggles to come to terms with Charlie's death. He moves to New York City, where he tries to start over and build a new life. But no matter how far he runs, he can't escape the memories of the love he lost.

As Sam grapples with his grief, he begins to write a novel about his relationship with Charlie. Through the act of writing, he is able to explore the complexities of their love and the ways in which it has shaped his life.
